

Where young people celebrate New Zealand's heritage and taonga

Living Heritage helps New Zealand schools develop and publish an online resource, based on a heritage treasure in their community. Living Heritage preserves history and culture in a digital format for every generation, and allows our children's voices to present a view of New Zealand on the Internet.

Living Heritage provides an authentic learning experience by encouraging students to become investigators and storytellers, collaborating to research and publish on the Web in their own language.

Participation in Living Heritage is free to all New Zealand schools and is open to all age groups. Self-publishing web pages help simplify the process of online publishing for students and teachers.
